BETTER NOT SAY IT IN MEXICO.
From Marathon (Texas) Hustler.
Mexico's revolution seems to be assuming more serious proportions than was realized at the beginning of the outbreak. We hope they succeed.

WHERE TO PLACE THE BLAME.
From San Antonio (Texas) Express.
We had always felt very kindly toward east Texas, but this news that east Texas produces most of the Texas laws is certainly distressing.

ALL WOULD BE BARRED.
From Alpine (Texas) Guide.
It is all right for the women of Texas to resolve against the marriage of imbeciles, but who is going to prove who is and who isn't in the classification?

The wife of our shirt front suggests that the fact of his wanting to marry should be considered sufficient proof of imbecility.

CASUALTY LIST AT EAGLE PASS.
From Eagle Pass (Texas) News-Guide.
The only one hurt in the late revolution supposed to be raging in the neighborhood of Eagle Pass, was H. O. Rawlins, the courteous and capable manager of the Western Union Telegraph company at this place. After being on the job steadily for five days, missing several meals to accommodate us fool newspaper correspondents, and sending 13,750 words during the "siege" his hand was slightly swollen. A little thing like that, however, did not deter Mr. Rawlins from being available at any hour for the purpose of getting off messages for the accommodation of correspondents and the public generally. Having no help, he was compelled to do all this himself. Well with a bouquet after a man is dead—give it to him when he can smell it.

DISTANCE CAUSES GROWTH.
From Eagle Pass (Texas) News-Guide.
When Col. Puentes and Lieut. Nicanor Valdez left C. P. Diaz to fight Madero in Guerrero, the San Antonio Light and the Express gave them 200 men; the New Orleans Times-Democrat furnished them with 500 men; and the Kansas City Star, not to be outdone, started them with an army of 800. It is now up to Washington and New York, they certainly ought to provide an army of 5000, and when Europe gets in the game Gen. Puentes and Brig. Valdez will probably be at the head of an army corps of 50,000. And the people of C. P. Diaz and Guerrero don't know anything about it!

A MATTER OF RELATIONSHIP.
From Mesa (Ariz.) Free Press.
In the matter of rather unique and mixed relationships the Free Press yesterday encountered a prize taker within the limits of the city of Mesa. A man whose name is the same as another family residing in another portion of the city, was asked if there was any relationship. He said:

"Yes, the two families are related. You may be interested in knowing further that I am my own grandfather and that my son is my own brother. Here is how it came about. He continued. 'You see I met a young widow in Missouri by the name of Sarah Minor and we were married. She had a stepdaughter. Then my father met our stepdaughter and married her. That made my wife the mother-in-law of her father-in-law, and made my stepdaughter my stepmother and my father became my stepson.'

"Then my wife had a son. My mother was my brother, of course, because he was my father's son. But he was also the son of my wife's stepdaughter and therefore her grandson. I then became grandfather of my stepbrother. Then my wife had a son. My mother-in-law, the stepmother of my son, is his grandmother, because he is her stepson's child. My father is the brother-in-law of my child, because his stepson is his wife. I am brother to my own son, who is also the child of my grandmother. I am my mother's brother-in-law, my wife is her own child's aunt, my son is my father's nephew, and I am my own grandfather. So there you are."

"QUITE AT SEA"

crowded into the cabin with William. There was room for nearly both of us, except our legs.

The rain pattered down and down. The thunder roared. The sea began to rise.

"This is a sad ending to our young lives, William," said I. "Let it be a warning to us in future."

We sat listening to the awful storm. Outside, the lightning flashed and the waves roared and hissed. The sail strained at the mast.

The keel began to grate softly. Outside, the storm was still raging. And presently we noted that the vessel began to heel over to one side, and no longer tossed about the waves.

"William," said I, "we've sprung a leak, and the Hannah Gwendolen is settling down."

The boat heeled more and more. The sea raged at its peak. I tried to compose a piece of poetry, but fell asleep.

I awoke several hours later. The boat was heeled over at an alarming angle, and quite stationary. I felt stiff and weary in every limb—but we were saved—saved!

I put my head out on deck. The sun was shining brightly. We were lying on a beach. Was it France, I wondered, or was it Germany? I was puzzled.

I looked at the land. We had drifted ashore at the edge of a town. I stared at the town incredulously. Then I awakened William.

"William," said I, "a miracle! After sailing half the seas over, we have drifted ashore at the very place we started from!"

William glanced over the side. "Not so much of a miracle, after all," he remarked ungraciously. At any time last night we might have stepped overboard and waded ashore.

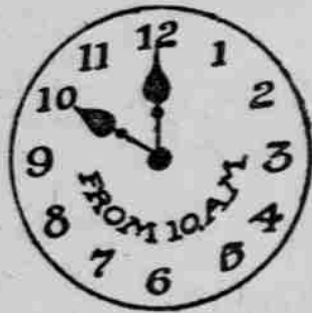

"Waded ashore?" I cried. "What do you mean?"

"Why, while you were quarreling about who was to be boss, we quite forgot to pull up the anchor, that's all!"

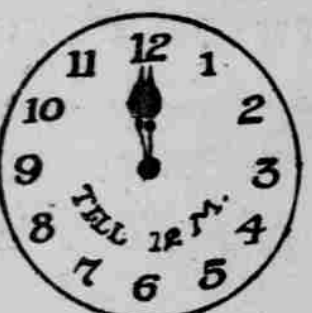

And at that, with a score of yards separating us, we left the beach in silence and went up to breakfast.

Married Life the First Year

Mabel Herbert Urner On 'The Open Window'

WARREN was shaving, his suspenders down, his face half lathered, and his chin poised in that angle peculiar to shaving. Helen came to the door.

"Dear Anna, says the kitchen window won't shut, and it's cooling the oven."

"Can't you see I'm shaving?" curtly. "Yes, I know, but Anna can't get it down and the biscuits won't be done in time for breakfast."

"Didn't I tell you I was shaving?" with his razor poised impatiently, while his eyes met hers angrily in the mirror.

Helen hurried back to the kitchen. "Mr. Curtis is shaving," she informed Anna, who was still struggling with the window. "Can't we manage to get it down?"

They both tried, but the window remained fast.

The breakfast.

"Then he'll have to take plain bread for breakfast," grumbled Anna. "No biscuits won't bake in that draught."

"Well, make some toast, then; he likes that if it's brown and crisp."

Anna muttered something under her breath as Helen hurried away to the baby.

Half an hour later, breakfast was served by a very sullen and silent Anna. There was neither toast nor biscuits, and the omelette lacked its usual light flakiness.

Warren took up a piece of cold bread and then threw it back on the plate.

"You don't expect me to eat that for breakfast, do you?"

"The oven wouldn't bake sir, with the window open, and I couldn't get it down," Anna answered sullenly.

"But I told you to make some toast," ventured Helen.

"If it wouldn't bake biscuits it wouldn't make toast," was Anna's laconic answer.

Warren pushed back his chair and made to feel that indirectly it was her fault. And she was humbly self-reproachful and penitent.

And now, when he started to leave for the office, she made a timid little motion to kiss him goodbye. But he hurried off, pretending not to notice. He had cut his finger setting down the window. That was a thing not to be quickly overlooked or forgiven. She must be made to feel his displeasure.

EFFORT HOPELESS IN REFORM MOVES

houses in regard to any bill other than a money bill in two successive sessions, and during an interval of not less than one year, and such differences are unable to be adjusted by other means, it shall be settled at a joint sitting composed of the members of the two houses; provided, that if the measure relates to a matter of great gravity, and has not been adequately submitted to the judgment of the people it shall not be referred to a joint sitting but submitted for decision to the electors by a referendum.

"That as to money bills, the provision should be on the following lines: That the electors be prepared to reject or amend money bills which are of a purely financial character, provided a majority provision is made against 'taking' and provided, that if any question arises as to whether a bill or any of the provisions thereof are of a purely financial character that question shall be referred to a joint committee of both houses with the speaker of the house as chairman, and who shall have a casting vote only. If the committee holds that the bill or the provisions in question are not of a financial character they shall be dealt with forthwith at a joint sitting of the houses."

Liberal Leaders Make Objection.
The Liberal leaders, represented in the house of lords by the earl of Crewe, objected to both the Roseberry and the Lansdowne resolutions on the ground that they did not strike at the evils complained of. The Roseberry resolutions providing for the reconstitution of the house were too vague, and at any rate, contemplated the retention of a majority in the reformed upper chamber by the direct representatives of the classes certain to be overwhelmingly Liberal in politics. This being the case, a joint sitting of the two houses, if the lower house was not altogether Liberal, would give the Conservatives a certain majority in the joint session and therefore would effectually block all Liberal legislation just as it now is blocked by the present house of lords. The second portion of the Lansdowne resolution, dealing with money bills, was met by the same objection, since the commons now claim, as they have for three centuries, the right of exclusive control over finance bills and the further right to decide for themselves as to what is a purely financial provision.

As a matter of fact, the Roseberry and Lansdowne resolutions were put forward to serve as a political campaign platform and not with any hope of their being adopted or even considered by the lower house. The lords knew that any hope of a compromise had vanished when the constitutional conference broke up, and their resolutions were made with an eye single to their political effect.
